A: I can show you how it is done in Visual Studio Team Services so you can see it happen and figure out what is happening: Go to the details of the branch you are trying to create or merge into. Click the "pull from" dropdown and click the source code that you would like to merge/rebase. You will get a "Download Source" tab that will show you the contents of the source branch. At this point you can hit the "Rebase" button (v) and this will cause a merge request to be created in VSTS. For more on what each of the other buttons do: Rebase - Displays the files from both sources that are going to be merged. Merge – Displays the files from the base branch and the files from the "pull request" to the base branch. This should get you started. I recommend watching this YouTube video to see how it works: Please let me know if you have questions or are running into trouble. Martin Students are the future of contemporary design, bringing new energy and vitality to some of the city's most vibrant and historically rich neighborhoods. Design students from The Cooper Union's experimental architecture and interior design program had the opportunity to intern in select high-rise residential buildings, demonstrating what a creative experience the contemporary studio experience is. In fact, it is fair to say that it is in this building that students bring the best ideas and creations that they have made throughout the duration of their studio experience. The contemporary interior design studio offers an interdisciplinary studio experience with industrial design, graphic design, and interior design. Starting in either the fall of their junior year or the winter of their senior year, studio students are typically assigned to a studio for eight to ten weeks. Working in teams with two classmates, the studio pedagogy fosters studio core skills, such as execution, creativity, and collaboration. Students are immersed in studio projects, typically based on a specific theme, and regularly produce viable, finished design solutions. However, they are also exposed to outside projects, undertaking studio-wide projects to be completed throughout the year. In the Fall Studio Competition, which was held at the Metropolitan Correctional Center, students were required to create their own individual works, which had to represent contemporary design concepts.
